ISCARIOTISM AND OUR UNSCEPTRED ISLE

by ROSINE de BOUNEVIALLE

IT can hardly be a coincidence that the only traitor among the twelve apostles of Our Lord Jesus Christ was the "intellectual" whom they considered eminently suitable to "manage the funds" of their small society. He was their banker - although his house was not that of Maxwell! It was not, however, the love of money that was at the root of his evil. Rather it was the same vice as Satan's - the pride that made him think he knew better than God how to manage, not just the funds, but the whole of human society. And when he found he was wrong, he still did not acknowledge the omnipotence of his betrayed Master. If he had, he would have known that repentance would make his sin forgivable. But as he could not forgive himself he remained, in his own mind, "better than God" who would have been "soft" enough to have forgiven him as He forgave Peter.

As for western society, it has long ago decided it knows better than God. Even though the resultant humanism has produced nothing but chaos in Church, State, education, industry, urban and rural economy, and all its scions and dupes have yet to admit that what they are doing is the ultimate evil that, unrepented, will be deserving of the suicidal climax such persistence in self-idolatry will surely engender.

Christians For Zion

That is western society. Then what about Zionist society? Is that not on the right track - back to fundamentals and the right way home? Recently, the post brought a packet of information and pleading on behalf of a society called "Christian Action for Israel", asking for a "Wall of Prayer for Israel" to be built around the world. This society, according to its 1991 newsletter, was founded by one Basil Douglas Jacobs, a "South African" it seems, whose life "became a refuge and example to many who were seeking to follow the Lord God of Israel". This statement was followed by the remark: "In addition, Basil's faithfulness to the local church of Jesus Christ earned him the respect of church leaders."

The rest of this somewhat specious document purports to be a history of the land of Israel, full of quotations from the Old Testament about the Second Coming of the Messiah "to restore the Kingdom of Israel". Such statements, it says, "only confirm that modern Israel is a biblical phenomenon". Well, if you can believe that... Somewhat further on we read, "Only when Messiah reigns over the world from Jerusalem in fulfilment of the Davidic Covenant will her borders finally and forever reach that of biblical proportions."

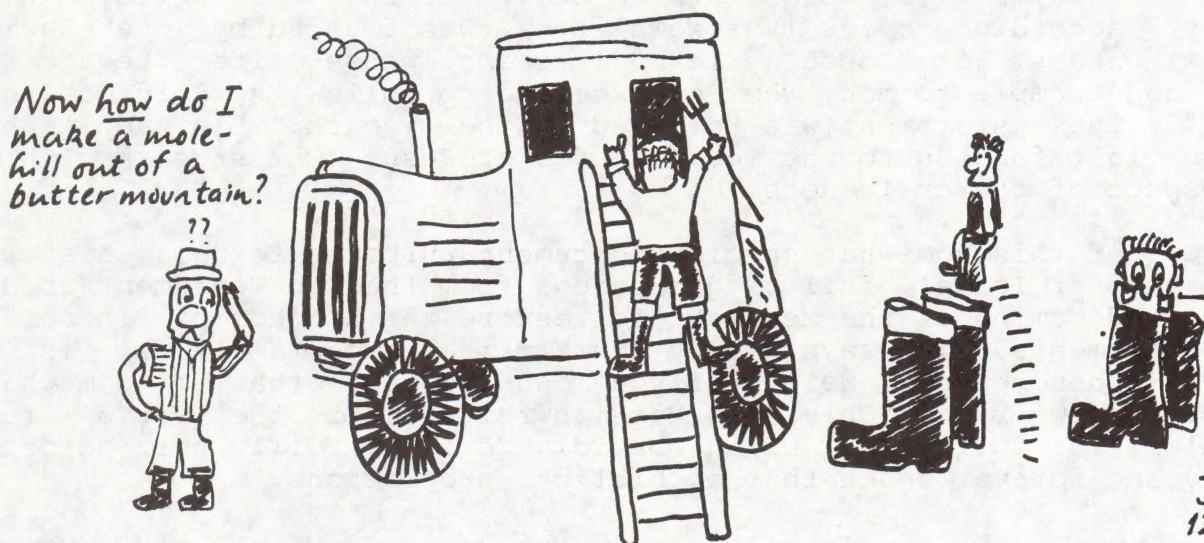

So that is what we all have to pray for: not for the conversion of the Jews but that this righteous people "that has never been an aggressor" will rule the world from Jerusalem! The only thing wrong with all this is that there is no mention of the breaking of the Davidic Covenant because of the repudiation and crucifixion of the Messiah in His First Coming. It seems that Zionist society like western society (with which it is not unconnected) has the same inhibition in refusing to recognise the signature of the One True God in the Blood of Christ. It is, in fact, adamant that it has done no evil of any kind. On the contrary, Zionists claim to be, as they say, "the victim of Christian animosity and anti-Semitic persecution". It is the perpetrators of the resulting "holocausts" who will never be forgiven but remain objects of vengeance and a source of "compensation" until bankrupt of life or property. Thirty pieces of silver, after all, would hardly buy a potter's field today, let alone the world - well, not without compound interest!

The Old Testament tells us that in Eden Adam and Eve "walked with God". After Abraham's covenant the Israelites were ruled by God represented by Judges. Time came when God's Chosen People tired of having only a Judge and asked for a King. Another step away from God's direct rule, until finally they arrived at the Sanhedrin and its majority rule which voted death to their rejected Messiah. Kingdoms tend to be the norm in Christendom too, but we know what has happened to both. Christendom is abandoned to Babel and kingdoms to democracy, and all seemingly bent on destroying themselves in despair. Again, it was not a coincidence that in the early '60s United Nations Day ousted the Feast of Christ the King from the last Sunday in October.

For us Humanism has had its day. Poor creatures, we have reached the edge of the abyss. We can be destroyed by our own vice or we can call our King again and have all things added. What we are doing is not unforgivable if only we recognise our own errors and repudiate them. God's mercy is always available but we have to ask for it with humility and a firm purpose of amendment. There is no other way to escape the fate of Judas Iscariot.

THE ELECTION IS COMING!

by FRANK BROOKES

AMAZING, isn't it, how while the issue of race is never brought up for reasoned discussion in this, our great democracy, it occasionally becomes a political football between the parties? Not, of course, that the issue is even then properly discussed. Dear me, no! All that happens is that one of the prostituted parties accuses the other of "racism", which brings forth indignant protests of "What us? Never!" The question of whether races can mix harmoniously, whether they want to mix, whether they ought to mix - this never comes up. All that happens is a gadarene rush by all party leaders to demonstrate how eager each one is to welcome with open arms the influx of alien peoples to what was once our country. Each leans over backwards at a perilous angle to show that they have minority candidates standing in the election.

Hypocritical and cowardly on this issue as all parties are (except such as the British National Party), nevertheless I regretfully conclude that they are precisely what we British as a people deserve! A nation of mumbling and inefficient grumblers, yobos, inhabitants of a dirty country whose social structures are manifestly falling apart, I sadly fear we deserve what we have got. Election after election voters troop off to the local decrepit school and mark a pencilled cross against a name and think - indeed, are assured by politicians and church leaders - that they have done their democratic duty. Their choice may be governed entirely by prejudice, their minds blunted and warped by the editorials of whatever newspaper they read after they turn from the sports and fashion pages, to the comments of pundits similarly prejudiced or taking care of their masters' interests.

This Is Democracy!

This is, we are told, "democracy" - free government by free people. Yet election after election, bringing with each one disaster upon disaster, as a nation we will mumble and grumble and wail that promises made to us are not being fulfilled. Then, with the firmness of a still warm jelly, we will feebly threaten to change things next time by putting Traitorium into Parliament and ousting Traitordee.

With all the services at our disposal these days in the shape of books, newspapers, television and radio, we ought to be politically well informed and educated. We are not, of course, because these tools for education are not used for that purpose. Even if they were, I doubt whether we could become a well-informed, critically alive people in under two generations. Sometimes I watch Brian Walden throwing "tough" questions at one or other of our party "leaders". But I wonder why we never see, for instance, John Tyndall, leader of the B.N.P., in the hot seat. Perhaps it is because he has a lot to say on our sorry state as a nation which could dramatically influence public attitudes if given sufficient opportunity to state and re-state his views.

The reason we do not see or hear him except for a few highly-selective words in the latest television smear-job is the censorship exercised in the name of what the Americans now call "correctness". It is not "correct" in Britain now, like in the States, to advocate the White Man's cause. Granted we are not yet actively persecuted for being

White - after all, we were born that way and so cannot really be blamed - but one does get the feeling, seeing all the unequal opportunities adverts for jobs in the newspapers that it might have been better if we had been given some other pigmentation!

It is not "correct" to stand up for Christian morality, the family, sexual relations only after and within marriage, loyalty for life to one partner. It is not "correct" in our country and time to demand fierce penalties for savage crimes, to advocate death to our I.R.A. enemies. We must "respect life"! Never mind that our respect for evil-doers inevitably means that we show in practice little concern for the lives of our servicemen in Ireland or for the security and safety of the weaker members of our society as they get mugged and murdered on our streets or in their homes! All this adds up to hypocrisy in those traitorous men and women who occupy positions of power in our state from which they destroy our industry, neglect our services and proceed to hand over our country and traditions of civilisation to foreigners.

The farce of another general election is almost upon us. Apart from politicians, this means we will also have churchmen preaching at us on the same "correct" themes. Secondary issues will take first place and politicians and churchmen will brawl over such issues as the numbers of "refugees" allowed into Britain and the amount of aid squandered on the Third World. The real issue of race will be ignored as candidates for Parliament fall over themselves to demonstrate that not only are they not "racist" but that they are ready to put ethnic minority interests right at the top of the pile of "concerns". Church leaders will follow the party politicians who show most "concern" - not, for instance, to married couples struggling in poverty to raise Christian families, but to homosexuals, "one parent" (in the illegitimate sense) families and ethnic minorities. They will, with typical political stupidity, advocate what are obvious contradictions, like cutting down our armed strength while being ready to meddle militarily in whatever foreign wars they find "morally justifiable".

Politicians Back Off

The political mess in which we find ourselves is largely a moral and religious mess. No politicians are prepared to face up to the uncomfortable issues which confront us. They prefer to indulge in petty, trivial and childish party political points-scoring in which one Right Honourable Friend after another attacks, within the strict confines of what is politically "correct", his chums on the other side. Church leaders, meanwhile, will drool over homos, the "option for the poor", the evils of being rich, the blessings of the poor (while trying to make them un-poor!) - anything, in fact, except the real issues of how to make Britain British again, how to attain a strong economy and how to instil into a drab, dreary and defeated British people pride of race and country.

Sadly it is odds-on that with all the party political propaganda deafening their ears, softening their brains and tempting their hopes, the people will once again troop to the booths to make their mark on a piece of paper in the hope that somehow this will resurrect industry, defeat the I.R.A. and keep our streets safe and clean. What a hope! I believe that only when this miserable and hypocritical party system is swept aside to make way for a new and vigorous form of British national political leadership will we as a people ever again be able not only to enjoy the respect of other nations, but even be able to respect ourselves. I will not vote for any of our political tricksters and con men when that election occurs. Instead I will spoil my paper by writing "British Nationalist" or "Put Britain First" across it.

Meanwhile, I will hope and pray and work as well as I can for the day when our British patriotic movements at last recognise the utter idiocy of disputing among themselves and form a common front to offer to the once great people of this land the opportunity to find their soul again.

 AND if all patriotic movements nurtured and supported candidates who would stand in their native places as Independent Nationalists they would have all the benefits of common reputation and none of the evils of the aroma of party politics. All true Britons would then be able to vote for a person instead of a party. In this respect, a move in the right direction is the promise, carried in the new B.N.P. policy booklet A New Way Forward, that election to Parliament would be carried out on a non-party basis, with each candidate standing "as an individual, bearing no party label and free to speak and vote as individual conscience and judgement dictate" - Editor.

"If you can't beat it, don't join it!"

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

MADAM - The stream of refugees jet into London Airport, fleeing from oppression, torture or death in their own countries, they claim; and a considerable proportion are telling the truth, according to our immigration authorities and Home Office, which acknowledge their right to asylum. Recently a broadcast told us how difficult it was for them to face an immediate interview and tell the truth to an immigration officer because in their own countries they were terrified of government authority. One aspect of this I've never heard mentioed.

In London within a few miles of the airport are the embassies of these terrible countries, manned by Their Excellencies, the ambassadors representing these very governments, and their staffs, living a privileged life and received with honour by our whole Establishment, from the Queen down. Surely if one "genuine refugee" from any country is granted asylum, friendly relations with that country must be broken off and its ambassador and all his staff promptly expelled. How can His Excellency and the persecuted refugee both be persona grata?

JANUS offers candid comment on news from home and abroad

A PILOT scheme to train a South African "government-in-waiting" was agreed by John Major and Nelson Mandela at the Commonwealth Conference held in what was once Rhodesia. It seems to be taken for granted that there will be Black rule in South Africa and that it will be provided by the Marxist A.N.C. Had Mr Major stuck his nose out of his V.I.P. hotel a little more, he would have had the opportunity to observe the calamitous consequences of ten years "majority rule" by Mugabe and his Marxist gangsters. No mention was made of the fact that there are nearly a million Indians and almost as many Coloureds south of the Limpopo; they seem to be "non-persons". Could this possibly be some sort of racial discrimination by Major and Mandela? Perish the thought that such a sentiment could exist in the "new South Africa"!

DID anyone else, I ask myself, wonder why no one asked Terry Waite just how he was "chained to the wall", presumably for five years, without having the most horrendous sores on the limbs encased in manacles? There may be a simple explanation, but why did no journalist think to ask for it?

NO prisoner should be segregated from other inmates on grounds of AIDS, we were told in a recent report. Prisoners should be issued with condoms and drug users should be given sterile needles. It is often said that mixing young offenders with old lags in prison merely means that the youngsters are initiated into criminal activities and learn how to break the law. I wonder what else they are now likely to pick up, particularly if the old lags are old fags, to boot!

THE news from Russia tells of food shortages, inflation and unemployment. So would this not be a suitable moment for the National Union of Mineworkers, in a spirit of fraternal solidarity, to repay to their Russian comrades the huge loan made to them during the miners' strike? It will be recalled that when the loan was made, ill-natured carpers sank so low as to suggest the money came from the Kremlin, as part of its policy of making trouble for the West at every opportunity. The allegation of Communist meddling was rejected, of course, with the disdain it deserved. Only the malicious would claim that it would indeed be surprising if proof had been found, given the involvement of the world's greatest experts at disinformation and deception. For our part we fully accept that the purpose of the loan was to supply hot drinks to "the lads" on the picket line or to provide stress counselling to miners subjected to a surfeit of Scargill rhetoric. We believe in the Tooth Fairy, too. Surely everybody does?

TO quote a bio-chemist at the Littlehampton Horticultural Research Institute, "...there is intense competition between Dolmio and Ragu and Cross & Blackwell and Heinz to have the reddest sauces." Is it the Internationale which contains the line, "The People's Sauce is deepest red"? Or will that occur in a revised version as the E.C.'s new hymn for 1992 (sung in strictest harmonisation, of course!)? Mind you, as one who lived in Cornwall for a time I don't disagree with the declaration by the Brussels mandarins that Cornish pasties should be made only in Cornwall. Genuine pasties made of short-crust pastry, covering separate dollops of potato, beef, onion and swede, are a world apart from the processed pap manufactured "up-country". Perhaps the Euro-crats will follow this ruling with others urging that Bath buns be made in Bath and Dundee cakes in Dundee. My only hope is that their regulations do not extend too far: I will have one hell of a job getting my chocolate bars from Mars!

A READER who saw our item last month about the National Westminster Bank's logo has remarked to me that long ago he noticed it was a graphical anagram of a device other than the swastika. Look at the next Nat West advert that appears in your newspaper: the logo is made up of three six-sided figures, rather like broad arrow-heads, facing outwards in directions 120 degrees apart. Rotate each one through 180 degrees and then move the arrow points inwards and together and you will get...the star of David! The star, incidentally, is made up of six lines crossing one another six times and forming a six-pointed figure. As with the Nat West logo, we have 666.

THE Montgomery Primary School in Birmingham has removed pictures and models of pigs from the walls because they might give offence to Muslim pupils; thus, P is now for Panda and so on. Why stop there? Hindus revere cattle and could object to having pictures of cows in the classrooms. Sikhs do not smoke or drink or have their hair cut, so out goes Old King Cole with his pipe and bowl and also, presumably, scissors. Certain Eastern religions preach vegetarianism, which rules out all farmyard animals, and there are some Oriental clerics who sweep the ground before them as they walk in case they tread on and kill any living things. A familiar figure still at school is the nit nurse, who comes round at intervals to inspect children's heads for livestock. Although I understand head lice are on the increase in children's hair, in due obeisance to Oriental religious feeling perhaps the nurse will find herself removed from schools, too!

GETTING POLITICS IN PROPORTION!

"A SPECTRE is haunting Eastern Europe, a herald of strife, muddle and chaos - the spectre of proportional representation. In Poland more than 100 parties competed, among them, notoriously, the Beer Party and the National Democratic Party, which campaigned on the slogan 'Out with Judaeo-Communists. Out with the Judaeo-Solidarity, Vote for us, true Poles.'" [Sunday Telegraph, 3/11/91]

INS AND OUTS AT WESTMINSTER

WHEN Heath was "In", a century
He batted for the E.E.C.
Then "out" declared in discontent
Still briefed for Europe all hellbent.

Next Wilson "In" and on the poop:
Poor G.B.P. * again the dupe.
A referendum made it think
It still could vote back from the brink.

Alas, Big Business owned the ink
Prepared to sign us to the sink.

Since: Ridley, Thatcher, Tebbit,
all
Were given "Out", they now can call
A sovereign switch to one and all
Nor cause a dent in Europe's wall.

Now "wing-bound" Labour's looped
the loop,
We're stuck for bad in E.C. soup
Whence all our saviours' stern
abstain
Will never get us out again.

So - metaphorically - this mix
Has naught on Party Politics.

SHAKESPEARE IN TROUBLE

The Merchant Of Venice has been withdrawn at Frankfurt as a result of protests from Jewish and Communist quarters.

HERR Shakespeare vos a writer
Vich haf a long time died,
But by ze new Gauleiter
Must be de-Nazified;
For it iss his intention
To make der people free
By forcing alle Menschen
Gut Demokrats to be.

Herr Shakespeare nefer knew it
Vot villains he must choose:
Ze Christians can do it,
But nefer must ze Jews;
Ze Kommunist elected
Mit Jews will all agree
Das Reich must be protected
Gut Demokrats to be.

Antonio von Venice
He vos a Nazi scamp,
He stole Herr Shylock's pennies
In Konzentrations Camp;
Herr Wilhelm Shakespeare knew it
No Demokrat was he:
And zat iss how ve view it
Gut Demokrats to be.

REBELS ARE EASILY SUBDUED ON THE 'BLASTED HEATH'

THE Prime Minister has promised that any deals struck on European union will be put to Parliament to vote on. There's democracy for you! In fact, his only worry is the tiny pack of anti-Marketeers and waverers in his own party, Labour and liberals being 100 per cent against national sovereignty. Conservative "rebels" are easily subdued, as Mr Heath demonstrated when he was bulldozing the E.C. Bill through Westminster. He and his henchmen simply made it known that in the event of defeat the Government would resign, ensuring a Labour victory. In addition, Conservative Central Office tried to create disaffection in the constituencies of the anti-Marketeers. These tactics paid off handsomely. If the same number of M.P.s who voted against the E.C. Bill at the outset had voted against the third reading, the measure would have been thrown out. Instead, over half of them abstained or even supported the Government.
